

I do not want any telemarketing calls under any circumstances. I should have a right to peaceful and QUIET enjoyment of my home without being interrupted by unwanted calls from telemarketers. My phone is for my business, not theirs. When I disconnected my cell phone service, an automated call was sent to my home 3 times a day, every single day for 3 weeks at varrying times to let me know that I should call them and find out what new services they could offer. This is rediculous! Under your proposal, it would have been legal because technically I was still a customer until my 30 day notice to disconnect expired. Would you like for me to call each of you this often just to play a pre-recorded sales pitch? The Indiana Laws have helped tremendously and I do not want to see them be diminished in any way. If anything, I would like to see them be even stiffer. I used to have about 6 calls a day from telemarketers and now I rarely ever get any. Thank God and Indiana!
